USING different payment cards to pay for different services will soon be a thing of the past.

Move over Mr Magnetic Stripe Credit Card, here comes the new chip card on the block.

Just insert a chip-based card in a card-reader terminal and key in the amount for whatever services or goods
 you have to pay, "anytime, anywhere."

Voila! You have just concluded an ordinary transaction minus the hassle of handling cash or small change.

Barely the size of a sunflower seed, the integrated chip, which is embedded on a piece of credit card-sized plastic, is the heart of the electronic payment revolution.

It can, for example, store various information ranging from the amount of money stored in the card to the card owner's personal data.

Another feature of the chip card, which major credit card companies and financial institutions are still working on, is the possibility of downloading any amount of money into the chip card via personal terminals – built into, for example, a mobile phone or a personal computer – basically anywhere in the world.

While this might seem like crystal ball gazing, the availability of the chip card technology today is an inspired start to promote a global cashless society.

At present, only a few countries in the world are beginning to adopt the technology, mainly the United States, France and Australia.

Visa International Australia and New Zealand executive vice-president Hilton Sack said brick-and-tile branches would be the thing of the past.

"New distribution channels are being looked into to find ways to increase electronic transactions with customers," he said.

Speaking at Visa International Asia Pacific Conference recently, Sack said: "The (credit card) transaction account has largely replaced the branch as the link between the customer and the bank.

"Therefore, the greater the functionality of the card, the more customers will use it."

Modern communications allow flow of information which has made the world smaller, markets more similar, consumer behaviour more alike across countries.

With further development of integrated computer chips, Sack said, it would enable Visa to add more functions to its card while reducing the number of branches and automated teller machines (ATMs).

"Customers will have more reasons to consolidate their business with one provider (such as Visa or MasterCard) as functionality increases," he said.

According to Sack, Visa allows access to credit at 12 million merchants around the world and its PLUS capability provides access to cash at over a quarter of a million ATMs worldwide.

Furthermore, the chip on the card will provide the customer with information on when, where and how the card was used.

Sack said a personal terminal or chip reader attached to a home personal computer would enable a customer to download information on recent transactions.

Topic: MY: New chip card on the block - go to top

"Customer information will no longer be stored on the bank's host computer; it can be transmitted via modem only at the customer's request," he said.

Surfing the Internet, shopping via virtual reality, selecting goods and paying for them with Visa would be possible from home at any time, Sack added.

To initiate the move towards the advent of a cashless society, Visa has pioneered the integration of the chip technology into its payment card.

One such product is Visa Cash — a stored value card.

Launched in the Gold Coast on Nov 15, 1995, under Visa's pilot programme, it is basically aimed at tapping cash transactions valued at less than US$20 (RM50).

Visa Cash will also be introduced at the 1996 Olympic Games in Atlanta.

The chip card – or the smartcard as the French calls it – technology has been gradually applied in Australia and New Zealand, and other countries in the region are also showing signs of interest.

Malaysia, like many other countries in the region, believes that the integrated chip card technology will play a pivotal role in the development of banking in the future.

Visa country manager for Malaysia, Indonesia and the Philippines, Pauline Sahetapy said that the "chip card technology is here to stay."

Although Malaysian consumers' appetite for new technology has just caught up, Sahetapy said that the chip card technology in the payment system would be introduced in Malaysia sooner than expected.

With the support of its 15-member Malaysian financial institutions, Sahetapy was confident that Visa Cash would be introduced in Malaysia soon.

Such a move by Visa to introduce the chip card technology is inevitable to capture the potentially huge and untapped Asian market.

The total number of Visa cards in circulation in the Asia-Pacific region alone, excluding China, increased by 13 per cent from 66.4 million cards in 1994 to 74.9 million cards in 1995.

The 1995 volume went up 29 per cent to US$87.6 billion (RM219 billion), representing 12 per cent of total worldwide volume.
